The Balance of Power

The pundits were wrong. The polls were wrong. And as the evening went on into the wee hours of the morning, the White House and U.S. Senate slipped from the grasps of the Democrats. With the Republicans defending more seats than Democrats in the Senate, the balance of power teetered on the brink of a major shift. The list of vulnerable senators grew and it looked as if the Democrats had a real shot at picking up the net-five seats needed to wrest control from the Republicans. This didn't happen, and in the end, the Republicans maintained control of the Senate. As predicted, the House remained in the hands of the Republicans, although they did have a net loss of a handful of seats. The following overview of the past election cycles in the House and Senate illustrates the back-and-forth response of the nation's electorate.

House	2016	2014	2012	2010	2008	2006
Democrats	194	186	201	193	257	233
Republicans	241	246	234	242	178	202

Senate	2016	2014	2012	2010	2008	2006

NeurosurgeryPAC Posts Election Successes

NeurosurgeryPAC does not get involved in presidential politics, but with Republicans controlling the Congress and the White House, elements of our policy agenda — importantly repealing and modifying elements of the Affordable Care Act — that have been stalled for the past eight years, now find themselves on the front burner. Neurosurgery scored many key victories with 92 percent of NeurosurgeryPAC-backed candidates winning their general election bids (as compared to 94 percent in the 2014 election cycle). The overall success rate, including both primary and general elections, was 91 percent (as compared to 89 percent in 2014). As of Dec. 16, 2016, for the two-year 2016 election cycle, NeurosurgeryPAC raised $395,387 falling well short of our $500,000 goal. This represents a 4 percent drop over the 2014 cycle, where we raised $413,402, also far below our goal. The participation rate decreased as well, from over 14 percent in 2012 to fewer than 11 percent in the 2014 election cycle and now 6 percent in 2016. On a positive note, our average contribution amount increased to $1,250, up from $1,044 per contributor in the 2014 election cycle and $1,053 in the 2012 election cycle.
